Thank you for bringing your students to NEWSIES. We’ve prepared this Study Guide to enrich your students’ experience at the show. It’s full of background information, experiential lesson plans, and activity handouts for your class.

Set in New York City at the turn of the twentieth century, NEWSIES is the rousing tale of Jack Kelly, a charismatic newsboy and leader of a ragged band of teenaged “newsies” who dreams only of a better life far from the hardship of the streets. But when publishing titans Joseph Pulitzer and William Randolph Hearst raise distribution prices at the newsboys’ expense, Jack finds a cause to fight for and rallies newsies from across the city to strike for what’s right.

NEWSIES is inspired by the real-life Newsboy’s Strike of 1899, when newsboys Kid Blink and David Simons led a band of orphan and runaway children on a two-week-long action against newspaper publishers Pulitzer and Hearst.

The lessons in this guide have been designed for use before or after your students attend the show. We’ve carefully aligned them to fulfill the Common Core State Standards as well as certain national and state standards. Teach the lessons as written, or take what works for you and adapt freely. Above all, enjoy exploring NEWSIES with your students.

Thank you for your commitment to arts education, and enjoy the show!

The Common Core State Standards fulfilled through these lessons will guide your students to:
- Demonstrate independence.
- Respond to the varying demands of audience, task, purpose, and discipline.
- Comprehend as well as critique.
- Build strong content knowledge.
- Value evidence.
- Understand other perspectives and cultures.

It Started With Some Kids…
NEWSIES is based on the real-life Newsboys’ Strike of 1899. Children who sold newspapers on the streets were called newsies. The New York newsies went up against two newspaper publishers, Joseph Pulitzer of The World and William Randolph Hearst of The Journal, to fight for a fair price for newspapers.

The Spanish-American War made New Yorkers hungry for headlines, and circulation boomed as a result. Once the war ended, people were less inclined to buy newspapers—war was bad for the world, but great for the newspaper business. The strike was the result of the newspaper publishers refusing to lower the price-per-paper that the newsies had to pay back down to the pre-war prices. The newsies were not willing to pay more for their papers to make up for a lack of headlines, so they decided to strike—their goal was to make the newspaper tycoons treat them as legitimate members of the business.

The strike lasted two weeks, from July 19 to August 2, 1899. During that time, the newsboys drew support from newsies all over the Northeast, as well as other young workers like messenger boys, bootblacks, and factory workers. The kids banded together to support one another, and at times things became violent—scabs were attacked on the streets, their papers ripped from them and destroyed to prevent their sale. Some boys lost their nerve and went back to the publishers, settling for the higher price.

The newsies eventually came to a compromise with the publishers: they would purchase their papers at the higher price, but the publishers would buy back any papers that the newsies couldn’t sell—this was more valuable to the newsies than a lower price would have been, as it allowed them to buy papers without the risk of losing money for any that went unsold. The Newsboys’ Strike of 1899 is a significant moment in history; it is one of the first strikes that was carried out by children and it ended in compromise. The kids won!
Then It Was a Movie…
In 1992 Walt Disney Studios released a live action musical based on the real-life events of the Newsboys’ Strike of 1899. With a screenplay by Bob Tzudiker and Noni White, and a score written by Oscar®-winning composer Alan Menken and lyricist Jack Feldman, the film was meant to be a revival of the live-action musical genre. Though it was not a hit in theatres, its memorable score and athletic dance numbers made it a fan favorite, and it quickly gained a cult following.

And Now It’s on Broadway…
A stage adaptation of NEWSIES was in great demand, so Disney Theatrical Group began working on developing a stage play. Alan Menken and Jack Feldman were called back to work on the score, and Tony Award®-winning book writer Harvey Fierstein signed on to adapt the screenplay for the stage. With this dream team of theatre makers on board, Disney Theatrical Group began a several year process of making NEWSIES as beloved onstage as it was onscreen.

Together with the Paper Mill Playhouse in New Jersey, Disney mounted a four-week engagement of NEWSIES to test the material. When that production received rave reviews and international interest in the show, the producers changed course and announced a limited Broadway run. NEWSIES opened at the Nederlander Theatre on March 29, 2012. The Broadway engagement was so successful that the show became an open-ended run. Over 110 years in the making, the story of the New York newsboys and their struggle for justice finally made it to the Great White Way!
ACT: ONE

Rooftops of New York
Jack Kelly is high above the rooftops of New York, savoring the last few moments of quiet before the sun rises and another day begins. His best friend Crutchie, a boy with a bum leg, asks for help climbing down to the streets. Instead, Jack shares his view of the city, and his dream for a better life (Santa Fe – Prologue).

Newsies Square
Meet the newsies! The boys sing about their life and their work (Carrying the Banner), and we are introduced to this ramshackle group of young friends. They start their day at the Newsboys’ Lodging House before making their way to the distribution window for The World, the newspaper that they sell to make a living. Davey and Les, two boys trying to earn money for their family, meet the newsies and try to learn the ropes. The great Jack Kelly agrees to partner with the boys, since Les’ young age will help him sell more papers.

Pulitzer’s Office
Joseph Pulitzer, publisher of The World, sits in his office, high above the streets of New York and the boys in Newsies Square. He expresses displeasure at the declining sales of his newspaper and vows to increase profits (The Bottom Line), even if it is at the expense of the newsies.

Streets of New York and Medda’s Theatre
The newsies spend the day selling newspapers, and Les proves to be a natural. Jack offers to help them find a place to spend the night, but the brothers reveal that they have a family and a home—something that most newsies lack. Before they can part ways, a crooked orphanage manager named Snyder appears and chases Jack. Davey and Les, unaware of who the man is or why he is chasing them, follow Jack’s lead and run through the alleys of New York. The boys find safety in Medda’s Theatre.

Jack introduces Davey and Les to the Great Medda Larkin, one of the Bowery’s most famous performers. Jack tells the boys about Snyder, who runs The Refuge, an orphanage for boys he runs solely to collect a government paycheck. He has had it out for Jack ever since he escaped right out from under his nose. Medda offers her theatre as a safe-haven for the boys, and they stay to watch her perform (That’s Rich).
During Medda’s performance, Jack notices Katherine, a young reporter he had seen earlier that day. Mesmerized by her beauty and intelligence, Jack makes an unsuccessful attempt to woo her. Meanwhile, the Bowery Beauties perform their show (Don’t Come a-Knockin’). When his sweet-talking routine doesn’t work, Jack resorts to sketching a portrait of Katherine (I Never Planned on You), and leaves it for her to find. With a tip of his hat, Jack Kelly is off.

Newsies Square
The newsies gather at the distribution window of The World for another day of selling papes. When the headlines go up, the boys are outraged to learn that Pulitzer has increased their price for newspapers—they can barely afford to eat as it is. After discovering that the competing newspaper, The Journal, has agreed to the same price increase, the boys decide to form a union and strike (The World Will Know).

Jacobi’s Deli
After a successful first day of striking at the distribution window, the boys gather at Jacobi’s Deli to contemplate their next step. Newly elected union leader Jack Kelly assigns various newsboys to spread the word to newsies in other boroughs, and to encourage all New York City newsboys to join their cause. Katherine, the young journalist that Jack met at the theatre, comes to the deli in hopes that the boys will give her an exclusive for The Sun’s next edition.

After considering it, Jack tells her to be at the distribution window bright and early tomorrow morning. Not only will the newsies prevent other boys from selling papers, but they plan to stop the newspaper delivery carts as well. He tells her that they all have a lot riding on her reporting skills, so Katherine gets right to work writing her breakout article (Watch What Happens).

Newsies Square
Only a few kids have assembled to strike the next day, and none of the newsies from the other boroughs come through. Jack urges Davey to convince the small group of frightened kids not to back down. When scabs arrive to take the newsies’ place, Jack asks them to stand in solidarity with all the city’s exploited working children. The scabs throw down their papers, just in time for Katherine and her photographer to snap a victorious photo (Seize the Day). But soon the newsies are surrounded by goons and engage in a fierce fight. When the police arrive and start going after the kids, the newsies run. Snyder scares Jack away, but not before he watches the Delanceys—goons who work for The World—take down Crutchie and carry him off to The Refuge. Reaching the temporary safety of his rooftop, Jack paces, guilty about leading the kids into danger. He looks out over the chaos and longs for an escape (Santa Fe).
ACT: TWO

Jacobi’s Deli
Battered and bruised after a failed attempt to thwart Pulitzer and his goons, the newsies lament the previous day’s events at Jacobi’s Deli. Amid rumors that he was captured or worse, several newsies wonder where Jack is. Katherine arrives with a copy of the story she printed in The Sun, complete with a front-page picture of the boys, above the fold! The boys are ecstatic; they thank Katherine and celebrate their fame (King of New York).

Medda’s Theatre
Back at Medda’s theatre, Jack is trying to forget the world around him by immersing himself in his art. He is painting a new backdrop for Miss Medda when Davey finds him and tries to convince him to come back to the fight. Jack refuses, saying that they have already lost too much—they won’t win a fight against a man as big and powerful and Joseph Pulitzer. Katherine and Les show up, and the three of them convince Jack that they do stand a chance, and that this is a fight worth fighting (Watch What Happens – Reprise). Jack agrees to come back to the newsies and help with the strike. The kids plan a rally.

Pulitzer’s Office
Discovering the headline “Newsies Stop The World,” Pulitzer furiously resolves to take down Jack. Snyder describes Jack’s criminal past and escape from The Refuge. Just then, a cocky Jack arrives to announce the newsies’ rally. Pulitzer scoffs and assures Jack that no paper will cover it. If it is not in the press, no one will ever know it happened. He then reveals Katherine, who left a life of luxury to write for a rival paper, and Snyder, who emerges from the shadows. Amid Jack’s shock and panic, Pulitzer offers a choice: get sent to The Refuge or renounce the strike and leave New York with pockets full of cash. The Delanceys escort Jack to the cellar to ponder his decision on an old printing press (The Bottom Line – Reprise).

Medda’s Theatre
That evening, Spot Conlon—the leader of the Brooklyn newsies—crosses the bridge with his gang to join newsies from every borough at Medda’s theater for the rally (Brooklyn’s Here). Davey gets the boys excited about their progress. When Jack appears, they leap to their feet, but their cheers turn to boos as he tells them to go back to work because they are no match for Pulitzer. Jack accepts his payoff money at the door and exits quickly.
Rooftops of New York
On his rooftop, Jack finds Katherine looking through his drawings of The Refuge’s bleak conditions. He snatches them from her and they argue fiercely until she kisses him. Katherine shares her plan to have the newsies distribute her article, “The Children’s Crusade,” which quotes Jack on the exploitation of working kids and calls for a citywide strike. Before heading to the old press Jack recently discovered, they share their hope in one another (Something to Believe In).

Pulitzer’s Cellar
With the help of Katherine and few well-connected friends, the newsies sneak into Pulitzer’s cellar to print their paper (Once and For All). The kids distribute the pamphlet—featuring Katherine’s article and Jack’s drawings—all over the city. Jack and Katherine go off in pursuit of some very important people.

Pulitzer’s Office
The office is flooded with angry calls from every corner of New York! Having read The Newsies’ Banner, Pulitzer is furious at the kids’ attempt to thwart him. Jack, Davey and Spot show up (Seize the Day – Reprise) to personally deliver the news, and say that the boys are willing to make a compromise. Pulitzer refuses to back down until Governor Roosevelt appears with Katherine and Jack’s drawings of The Refuge. Jack and Pulitzer decide to settle their problem alone, and everyone leaves the room. They come to the agreement that the price increase will remain as long as the publishers buy back any unsold papers at the end of the day. If the boys are able to take a few more papers without the risk of losing money, chances are that they will sell more and circulation might actually increase! The two shake hands on the compromise, and the strike is over.

Newsies Square
Outside, Jack announces the end of the strike. Crutchie appears amid the jubilation, followed by a handcuffed Snyder, who is led off to jail. Despite his dreams for Santa Fe, Jack realizes that the newsies are his family and Katherine gives him something to believe in—so he’s staying put for now (Finale).
MEET THE CHARACTERS

JACK KELLY – The leader of the Manhattan newsboys is a surly, independent dreamer who yearns to get out of the crowded streets of New York and make a better life for himself out West.

CRUTCHIE – Jack Kelly’s best friend is a newsie with a bum leg that causes him pain, but helps him sell more papers.

DAVEY – Les’s older brother starts selling papers to help his family earn a living but becomes swept up in the fervor of the strike. A leader in his own right.

LES – Davey’s younger brother is inspired by the freedom of the newsies and loves their independent lifestyle.

WIESEL – “Weasel” runs the distribution window for The World and knows most of the newsboys by name. He has the help of the intimidating Delancey brothers, who keep order by any means necessary.

OSCAR and MORRIS DELANCEY – These thugs work at the distribution window for The World. They take the side of the publishers in the strike and are known to use their firsts to make a point.

Snyder – This crook runs The Refuge, a ramshackle orphanage for homeless boys. He is concerned only with catching enough boys to keep his government checks coming.

MISS MEDDA LARKIN – The big-voiced saloon singer and star of the Bowery offers her theatre as a safe haven for Jack and the newsies. She stands behind them in their fight for justice.

KATHERINE PLUMBER – This young reporter wants to make a name for herself as a legitimate journalist in a time when women aren’t taken seriously. She is inspired by the potential of the brand new century.

JOSEPH PULITZER – A businessman through and through he owns The World and is concerned only with the bottom line.

MR. JACOBI – The deli owner lets the newsies congregate in his restaurant to escape the hard streets of New York – when he doesn’t have any paying customers, that is.

SPOT CONLON – The reputation of this leader of the Brooklyn newsies precedes him.

The Other Newsies

Albert, Buttons, Elmer, Finch, Henry, Ike, Jojo, Mike, Mush, Race, Romeo, Sniper, Specs, and Tommy Boy.
Although the newsboys featured in NEWSIES aren’t actual people from history, they are an amalgamation of the real kids who rallied in 1899. Our play’s hero, Jack Kelly, is based on a newsie known as Kid Blink, who was blind in one eye. By creating their own historically based characters, students will encounter NEWSIES from an authentic point of view.

Subject: English Language Arts, Social Studies, Theatre Arts

Standards Addressed:
This lesson fulfills the following Common Core State Standards:
Writing, Grades 4-8: 3, 4
Speaking and Listening, Grades 4-8: 1 (a-e), 3, 4, 6

Line of Inquiry:
What informs a person’s character? What can images tell us about character? How does an author create historically based characters?

Goal:
To encourage empathy for historical figures and to allow students to write creative fiction based on historical evidence.

Objectives:
Students will:
- critically analyze historical photographs and hypothesize on circumstances surrounding the subjects.
- create an original, historically based character.
- write and perform an original monologue, featuring historically inspired content.
Monologues
The theatrical term monologue refers to a speech made by a character in a play. Now that your students have created a historically based character, have them write a one- to three-paragraph monologue. Monologues should be written in the first person, in the character’s voice, and should address one or more of the items students established on their character worksheets. Select a few volunteers to perform their monologues for the class.

Reflection:

Variation: If you are working with older students, take the activity further by having them create a social networking profile for their character. Draw a template on the board representative of the profile pages on popular social networking sites. After students have completed their character’s profile, challenge them to generate a list of status updates their character might post. These updates can be the inspiration for the monologue project described in the reflection activity. You can revisit these profiles in the Class and Power lesson—what would the social network of 1899 look like? How are the characters in NEWSIES connected? What might they post about as the strike progresses? How is social networking used today to rally groups of people?
Character Creation

Choose one of the historical photos below and create a character based on the image you selected. Complete the worksheet with information based on your class discussions, the information in this guide, and your own imagination!

Introduction:
The 1992 film Newsies, on which NEWSIES the musical is based, has gained a cult following. But neither film nor stage play would exist if real kids hadn’t stood up for their rights in 1899. It is important for young audiences to understand the process of the playwright as he dramatizes historical source material for the stage. By trying their own hand at playwrighting, students will gain a new perspective on this historically based musical.

Subject: English Language Arts, Social Studies, Theatre Arts

Standards Addressed:
This lesson fulfills the following Common Core State Standards:
Reading Informational Text, Grades 4-8: 1-7
Writing, Grades 4-8: 3 (a-e), 4-7, 9
Speaking and Listening, Grades 4-8: 1 (a-d), 2, 4, 6

Writing for Literacy in History/Social Studies, Grades 6-8: 1 (a-e), 2 (a-f), 4, 5, 7, 9

Line of Inquiry:
What is the process of the playwright as he dramatizes historical material for the stage?

Goal:
To provide students with first-hand experience in adapting historical events for the stage.

Objectives:
Students will:
- identify the reasons history is recorded.
- identify the components of a compelling story.
- learn historical facts about New York City in 1899.
- write an original scene, based on historical events.
- perform an original scene for the class.
- decode their work to identify fact and fiction.
Dramatic Moments in History
Use these prompts to engage your class in a discussion about historically based fiction:

- What kinds of historical events do people record? What is it about the events in your history textbook that make them worth studying?
- Can you think of any moments in history that have been made into a novel? What about a book or a TV show? A stage play or musical?
- Does an author always replicate an historic event exactly the way it happened? Why might an author change something, create new characters, or speculate about an under-documented piece of history?
- What makes a book, movie, TV show or play engaging? Do any of those traits occur in historical events? Is history good inspiration for drama?

Variation: If you are working with younger students, pick some iconic US landmarks and break the class into small groups. Charge the groups with creating a series of tableaus (or frozen stage pictures) that tell the story of how the landmarks came to be.

If you are working with older students, have your playwriting teams investigate and write about a dramatic moment in history that they are studying (like women’s suffrage, Rosa Parks’s bus ride, or the Gold Rush).

Main Activity:
Adapting History
Distribute the handout on the following page and read the article aloud as a class. Divide your class into groups of three or four and review the directions. As your groups brainstorm and begin to write, walk around the classroom and field any questions. Give your playwrights ten and two-minute warnings to complete their scenes. Allow each group to perform their scene for the class.

Reflection:
Ask each group to create a Venn-diagram reflecting their scene. Draw this model on the board for your students to reference as they work.
NEWSIES is set in 1899—the end of the 19th century and a time of great change around the world. Advances in technology, like the invention of the film camera, the commercial automobile, and successful prototypes of the airplane meant people were more mobile and informed than ever before. Around the world, colonized nations fought to gain their independence and workers went on strike to improve their working conditions. Farmers in South Africa fought for their independence against their British colonizers in battles later known as the Boer Wars. The Spanish colonies of Cuba and the Philippines also wished to govern their own countries and the struggle led to an international conflict.

In New York City, Mayor Robert Van Wyck presided over a newly incorporated metropolis. The boroughs of Manhattan, The Bronx, Brooklyn, Queens and Richmond (later known as Staten Island) were brought together on January 1, 1898, making New York City the second largest city in the world. The city was speeding forward into the new century with several new improvements. Construction for a public library at 42nd Street and 5th Avenue in Manhattan began in the spring of 1899. The Bronx Zoo also opened in 1899 with 843 animals in 22 exhibits. With the expansion of the boroughs, the city had to make it possible for people to get around town. In addition to the already completed Brooklyn Bridge, the city began laying tracks for a subway that would connect Manhattan and Brooklyn. The subway would open to passengers five years later, in 1904.

At Ellis Island, immigrants from all over the world continued to surge into the city. An estimated 330,000 people came through New York harbor that year, primarily from Italy and Russia. Many of these new Americans settled on the Lower East Side of Manhattan, making the cramped neighborhoods even tighter.

FAMOUS PEOPLE BORN IN 1899 INCLUDE:

- Duke Ellington
- Fred Astaire
- E.B. White
- Ernest Hemmingway
- Alfred Hitchcock

The paper clip was invented, Aspirin was patented, and Marshall "Major" Taylor became the first African American to win a world championship in a sport.

ALSO HAPPENING IN 1899:
The paper clip was invented, Aspirin was patented, and Marshall "Major" Taylor became the first African American to win a world championship in a sport.

Directions:
Working in small groups, select an event described in the second paragraph of the article on the previous page. Work with your group to write a scene from a play based on the event you selected; your scene should include at least two characters and five lines of dialogue and follow these guidelines:

- Each character must have a name.
- You must communicate your setting using dialogue or stage directions. Stage directions are unspoken words that describe the setting, and tell us where the actors go and what they do onstage. You can put your stage directions in parentheses.
- Your scene must have a beginning (exposition), middle (conflict), and an end (resolution).
- Incorporate historical facts from the article as you write your scene, but also use your imagination to create characters and fill in the gaps of your story.

When you attend NEWSIES, pick out two locations or characters that you think are real places or people from history and two that you think the playwright invented for the story. Why might a playwright choose to create new people or places for a historically based musical?

Opening of the Bronx Zoo, 1899
Despite its catchy music and show-stopping choreography, NEWSIES highlights a very real struggle that many children around the world still face today. Child labor was once common in the United States. By exploring the real plight of working children, students will understand the stakes of the newsboys’ strike and appreciate the reform that happened at the turn of the century.

Subject: Math, Social Studies, English Language Arts

Standards Addressed:

This lesson fulfills the following Common Core State Standards:
- Math, Grades 4-5: 4.OA, 5.OA (3)
- Reading Informational Text, Grades 4-8: 1-9
- Writing, Grades 4-8: 1(a-d), 2 (a-e), 4, 7-9

- Reading for Literacy in History/Social Studies Grades 6-8: 1-5, 7
- Writing for Literacy in History/Social Studies, Grades 6-8: 1 (a-e), 2 (a-f), 4, 7, 9

Line of Inquiry:

What was the lived experience of child laborers? What did the reformers work to change? How did the Newsboys’ Strike of 1899 pave the way for the rights US children enjoy today?

Goal:

To illuminate the challenging working and living conditions of disenfranchised kids in 1899, and to examine the desperate circumstances and tremendous effort necessary for reform.

Objectives:

Students will:
- identify the difference between typical childhood chores and child labor.
- work in groups to solve math problems.
- understand the daily struggle of working kids at the turn of the century.
- recognize how reform comes about.
Chores vs. Labor
Ask students to offer various tasks and jobs that kids today are expected to take responsibility for. What must students do before school? During school? After school? In the summer? What chores are typical of kids today? What can kids expect in return for their efforts? An education? Shelter, love, and food? An allowance? Write your class’s ideas on the board.

A Day in the Life of a Newsie
Distribute the following activity and read the article aloud as a class. Divide your class up into small groups and review the directions. If necessary, work through some of the math as a class to ensure everyone understands.

Journaling Reform
Ask students to write a journal entry answering one of the following questions:
• What are the differences between the lifestyles of newsies in 1899 and kids where you live today? What are the benefits and challenges of being a kid in each circumstance?
• Why did the reformers fight for child labor laws? What do you think working kids thought when the laws passed? What do you think their families thought?

Variation: If you are working with older students, ask the groups to determine how long it would take—assuming Racetrack were to sell through 95% of his inventory everyday—before he runs out of money completely. Do any variables affect this outcome? How many papers should Racetrack buy each day?
In America, the idea that a kid’s job is to go to school and prepare for her future is a relatively new one. While many kids today are expected to do chores, set the table or help with dishes or laundry, this is not what is meant by “child labor.” Throughout most of American history it was normal for children to work long hours at difficult and dangerous jobs.

Child labor in America is as old as the country itself. In the early 1600s, it was believed that crime and poverty were a result of idleness, not a lack of education. As a result, poor children were shipped by the thousands from England to the American colonies to become apprentices. This arrangement helped England manage its most helpless citizens and also provided a cheap solution to the labor shortage in the colonies. Colonists’ children were also apprentices or did grueling work on family farms.

During the Industrial Revolution, as the number of factories increased, so did the number of jobs. Factory owners needed more workers, and turned to children to help do everything from operating dangerous machinery to mining coal. It was expected that children as young as 10 years old work 12 or more hours per day for six days a week. According to the U.S. Census of 1880, one in six American children were employed. This number does not account for the number of children under 10 years old working illegally in sweatshops or on the streets. In 1881 only seven states had education laws requiring kids to attend school, but even in these states, many people found ways to get around the law.

By the turn of the twentieth century, at the time when NEWSIES is set, the child workforce hit its peak with almost two million legal and countless undocumented working children. During this period, reformers began to take action and created child labor laws, fought to end the abuse of kids in the workplace, and worked to make sure that all children had the opportunity to better themselves through education.
“Newsie” is a term for a child who sold newspapers on the streets at the turn of the century. The newsies of New York City were popularly admired as “little merchants,” for, unlike children working for a company in factories, the newsboys were seen as business people. Even though they were their own bosses, the newspaper owners controlled the prices and the newsies sometimes had to choose between food and a bed to sleep in for the night.

It was not until 1938 that Congress passed the Fair Labor Standards Act, a law that prohibited the employment of kids younger than 16, and placed limits on the employment of kids between 16 and 18 years old.

Many people argued that child labor helped children by teaching them a trade. In reality, their jobs as children kept them from going to school and improving their futures.

SPOTLIGHT ON REFORMERS

LEWIS HINE (1874-1940)

Lewis Hine was a New York City schoolteacher and photographer. He felt so strongly about the problem of child labor that he quit his job to take photographs for the National Child Labor Committee. Most of the historical photographs of working kids in this guide were taken by him. He understood that a picture could be a powerful tool to make the public comprehend the problem of child labor in America.

MOTHER JONES (1830-1930)

One of the most famous reformers was Mary Harris Jones, better known as "Mother Jones". In 1903, Mother Jones visited the Kensington Textile Mills near Philadelphia. She was horrified when she saw what had happened to the child workers, most of whom were only 9 or 10 years old. Many of the children she visited had lost fingers or crushed bones by working with dangerous machines. Mother Jones organized the children and took them on a cross country "Children's Crusade" that led them to the home of President Theodore Roosevelt. Although the president refused to see them, Mother Jones's "Children's Crusade" did bring the issue of child labor to a much wider audience.
1) This is Racetrack Higgins. Racetrack has 35¢ in his pocket this morning. After cleaning his bunk and getting ready at the lodging house, Racetrack heads to the distribution window to buy the newspapers he will resell on the streets. Papers normally cost 50¢ per hundred, but Racetrack just found out the prices went up! He'll have to pay 60¢ per hundred papers this morning. It looks like a nice day, and there is a good headline, so he thinks he can sell 50 papers today. He might be able to sell more, but if he doesn’t he’ll never see that money again. The publisher won’t buy back his unsold papers! Racetrack decides to buy 50 papers.

What is the cost of 50 papers? _________________________

How much money does Racetrack have left? _____________

2) The weather turns bad, and three of Racetrack’s papers get ruined by the rain. No one will buy them! He manages to sell rest of the papers at the going rate of 1¢ per paper.

How much did Racetrack earn today? _____  How much money does Racetrack have now? ___

3) Racetrack is hungry and tired. Which of items below do you think Racetrack should spend his money on? Remember—he’ll need enough money leftover to buy tomorrow’s newspapers, and the weather has turned stormy.

- Bunk at Newsboy’s Lodging House: 6¢
- Supper: 20¢
- Lunch tomorrow (pork and beans): 6¢
- Ticket to theatre on the Bowery: 20¢
- Private bed at Newsboys’ Lodging House: 10¢
- Breakfast in the morning (bread and coffee): 6¢
- Candy: 1¢
- Tomorrow’s Papers: ____ ¢

When you attend NEWSIES, notice which grownups want to help the newsies. Why do these adults care? Which grownups seem indifferent? What could sway their opinion on the strike? What other types of jobs do the newsies talk about when they try to draw awareness to all the working kids in the city?
Introduction:
NEWSIES is set at the turn of the Twentieth century in the newly incorporated and rapidly expanding New York. The city was home to the some of the most wealthy men in the world; at the same time, new immigrants poured through Ellis Island and settled into deplorable and cramped tenement houses. There were huge disparities between the haves and the have-nots, and NEWSIES examines the power dynamics between one of the most powerful men in the world, and a group of uneducated, orphaned, and disenfranchised kids. By exploring class systems, students will understand the ways in which social standing influences power and politics ... and what happens when the scales tip.

Subject: Social Studies, English Language Arts, Theatre Arts

Standards Addressed:
This lesson fulfills the following Common Core State Standards:
Reading Informational Text, Grades 4-8: 1-6, 9
Writing, Grades 4-8: 1 (a-d), 3 (a-e), 4, 7-9
Speaking and Listening, Grades 4-8: 1 (a-d), 2-4, 6
Reading for Literacy in History/Social Studies, Grades 6-8: 1-6, 9
Writing for Literacy in History/Social Studies, Grades 6-8: 1 (a-e), 2 (a-f), 4, 7, 9

Line of Inquiry:
What were the disparities between New York’s wealthiest and poorest inhabitants at the turn of the Twentieth century? How did these dynamics influence a person or group’s power?

Goal:
To encourage critical investigation into the social influences that dictate class and power.

Objectives:
Students will:
• discover disparities between classes.
• identify power as symbiotic.
• make critical arguments and debate a case as a group.
• develop empathy for historical figures.
• write analytically and expressively about historical events.
Judgments and Assumptions
Create two handouts.

- On handout A, write the following:
  “Friens and feller workers. Dis is a time which tries de hearts of men. Dis is de time when we’se got to stick together like glue.... We know wot we wants and we’ll git it even if we is blind.”
- On handout B, write this quote:
  “Friends and fellow workers: this is the time that tries the hearts of men; this is the time when we’ve got to stick together like glue. We know what we want, and we’ll get it even if we are blind.”

Distribute one handout to each student, ensuring half the class receives A and the other half B. Ask the students to read through their quote independently, and to write their answers to the following questions:

- Do you think the speaker is intelligent? Why or why not?
- Do you think the speaker is educated? Why or why not?
- Do you think the speaker is rich or poor? Why?
- How old do you think the speaker is? Why?
- Do you think the speaker is powerful or weak? Why?

Tell the class that they received different versions of the same speech. How did their assumptions vary based on which version they read? Why might some newspapers choose to publish version A and others version B?

Warm Up:
Tammany and Tenements
Read the article on the following page aloud with your students. Divide your class in two, and have one half represent the politicians of Tammany Hall and the other half New Yorkers who live in crowded tenement houses. Arrange your classroom so that the two groups face each other. Review the directions on the following page and begin the activity. Act as a moderator for the discussion, but allow the class to effectively argue their cases.

Main Activity:
Purchasing Power
Ask students to pick one of the historical figures in the next activity. Students should write a letter from that individual to a family member or friend, explaining their feelings on the recent election of Mayor Van Wyck. How will the new Mayor impact their daily lives? Do they have more power? Less power? At what cost?

Reflection:

Variation: If you are working with older students, refer back to the excerpt from Kid Blink’s speech in the warm up activity. Have students select a historical figure from the Class & Power handout and write an op-ed piece about the strike and Kid Blink’s speech. Articles should be written in the first person and in their character’s voice.
Your class has been divided into two groups; politicians at Tammany Hall and recent immigrants who live in New York’s tenements. You’ve been invited to a meeting regarding the upcoming Mayoral election. The Tammany Hall group would like to elect Robert Van Wyck to office, and need to win the votes of the tenement citizens. Have a conversation with the other group. What will it take to convince the tenement occupants to vote for Van Wyck? What services do the citizens need in order to consider voting for a particular candidate? What could sway the vote?

Tammany Hall

Founded in 1786, Tammany Hall was a political organization in New York City that often dominated local and state politics. By the mid 1800s Tammany controlled the city politics, and was referred to as a “political machine” because of the way it ensured its desired candidates were elected. Tammany politicians were voted into office by the city’s poorest residents: recent immigrants and others who lived in tenements. By promising them food, jobs, services, and housing, Tammany politicians regularly won elections by appealing to New York’s most needy citizens. Tammany Hall became a corrupt organization; the people in charge regularly profited from the projects they initiated and the services they provided.

Tenement Houses

Tenements were cramped and unsafe homes, often occupied by multiple families. In New York, most tenement occupants were poor, immigrant families. At the time, New York was the most densely populated city in the world; the Lower East Side was home to over 800 residents per acre. The public became aware of the deplorable conditions in 1890 when Jacob Riis published How the Other Half Lives, which used shocking photographs and vivid descriptions to illustrate life in New York’s slums. The book led to the Tenement Act of 1901, which reformed housing standards across the city.
Who’s Who: 1899, New York

Robert Van Wyck (1847-1918), 91st Mayor of New York

Robert Van Wyck began his public career as a city judge and later rose to Chief Justice, working closely with the political organization, Tammany Hall. In 1898, he became the 91st Mayor of New York, and the first mayor to preside over the newly incorporated five boroughs. Mayor Van Wyck also awarded the city’s first subway contract, valued at $35,000,000. In 1900, he was implicated in an Ice Trust Scandal by owning a large sum of shares in the American Ice Company before they planned to double their price from 30 to 60 cents per hundred pounds. The American Ice Company was the sole ice provider for the city, and therefore was an illegal monopoly. An investigation was conducted by Governor Theodore Roosevelt and, although the mayor was found to be not guilty, the scandal cost him the election in 1901. Mayor Van Wyck continued to work as a lawyer and moved to Paris in 1906. He lived there until his death in 1918.

Theodore Roosevelt (1858–1919), 33rd Governor of New York

A life-long public servant, Theodore Roosevelt served as a State Assembly Member, United States Civil Service Commissioner, president of the New York Board of Police Commissioners, and Assistant Secretary of the Navy. As the leader of the Rough Riders, Roosevelt became a national hero during the Spanish-American War. As governor, he improved labor laws, outlawed racial segregation in public schools, and advanced park and forestry programs. In 1900, he was elected vice president under William McKinley. Roosevelt became president after McKinley’s assassination in 1901, and was reelected independently three years later.
Joseph Pulitzer (1847-1911), Editor and Owner of The New York World

Joseph Pulitzer was born in Hungary in 1847. At the age of 17, after the death of his father, Pulitzer immigrated to the United States to enlist in the Union Army. At the end of the war, he traveled from New York City to St. Louis to find a job. After three years of working as a fireman, dockworker, waiter, and grave digger, Pulitzer was offered a job writing for the German newspaper, the Westliche Post. Despite his poor eyesight, he was so successful that he was named managing editor and eventually purchased the St. Louis Dispatch, one of the major newspapers in the city. Pulitzer purchased The New York World in 1883 and turned the failing paper into one of the most widely-read publications in the city. The articles that The World published about the sinking of the battleship U.S.S. Maine were a large contributor to the start of the Spanish-American War. Pulitzer died in 1911 at the age of 64 and left enough money to Columbia University to start a Journalism school. The Pulitzer Prize, an award for excellence in journalism, literature and music, was named in his honor.

William Randolph Hearst (1863-1951), Editor and Owner of The New York Journal

William Randolph Hearst was born into a wealthy family in San Francisco. After attending Harvard University, Hearst became the manager of a paper his father owned, The San Francisco Examiner. At The Examiner, he published stories by some of the best writers of the time, including Mark Twain and Jack London. In 1895, he decided to purchase The New York Morning Journal, becoming a fierce competitor for Joseph Pulitzer and The New York World. Hearst became so successful in the newspaper business that at the peak of his career, he owned over 20 newspapers across the United States. By the 1940s, Hearst’s company, the Hearst Metrotone News, created programs for radio, movie newsreels and television. Hearst was also an enormous art collector and his home in San Simeon, California has been transformed into a museum. Hearst died at the age of 88 in 1951.

Each of these historical figures broke barriers by accomplishing things society did not expect of them. When you attend NEWSIES, notice which characters break barriers in the story. What makes Katherine, Miss Medda, and Jack exemplary? Does Pulitzer break any barriers? How do these traits bring about change?
Kid Blink (unknown), Newsies Leader
The leader of the real-life Newsboys’ Strike of 1899, Kid Blink was named for his signature eye patch (he was blind in one eye). A ragamuffin who led the newsies in their fight for justice, Kid Blink was the inspiration for Jack Kelly in Disney’s Newsies. Kid Blink was often quoted in newspapers covering the strike, with writers using the phonetic spelling of his speeches in an effort to keep his dialect intact. Kid Blink and the other newsies allegedly found this style of reporting condescending.

Jacob Riis (1849-1914), Photo Journalist
Born in Denmark in 1849, Jacob Riis emigrated to the United States in 1870. He began work as a Police Reporter for The New York Tribune in 1877, and soon after was employed as a photo-journalist for The New York Evening Sun. Sometimes referred to as one of the fathers of photography, Riis published How The Other Half Lives, a photo-account of poverty in the city. He later caught the eye of President Theodore Roosevelt, and the two became lifelong friends. Riis spent much of his professional life documenting the life of impoverished children and laborers in the nation’s urban centers.

Aida Overton Walker (1880-1914), Performer
Aida Overton Walker was one of the premiere African American artists of the turn of the century. Known for her original dance routines and refusal to conform to the stereotype of traditional black female performers, Walker had a successful career as a star of the Bowery and beyond. Aida married George Walker, whom she performed with, in 1898 and the pair became one of the most revered African American couples on the stage. Before her death in 1914, Aida worked to aid young black women striving to make a name for themselves; she organized benefits in honor of the Industrial Home for Colored Working Girls, and she played an active role in the development of young black women as stage performers.

Nellie Bly (1864-1922), Journalist
Nellie Bly was the pen name of female journalist Elizabeth Jane Cochran. In a time when female reporters didn’t cover much beyond the society pages, Ms. Bly made a name for herself as a legitimate journalist. She reported on her record breaking trip around the world, and even faked a mental illness to report on what it was like to be a patient in a mental institution.
The term yellow journalism was coined in the 1890s to describe sensational and often inaccurate reporting designed to increase circulation of newspapers. Pulitzer and Hearst, two competing titans of journalism, notoriously exaggerated and invented headlines to outsell the other’s publication. The Spanish-American War is often described as the first “media war”; Hearst and Pulitzer’s newspapers fuelled the U.S. interest in the conflict, and business boomed.

How did journalism in the late 1890s affect the public’s interest in the Spanish American War? How does journalism today guide public opinion on political matters? What are the ethical responsibilities of journalists and publishers?

Students will:

- identify the differences between sensationalized news and balanced journalism.
- understand why publishers may want to sway public opinions.
- work in small groups to create content for a viral news story.
- present original work to the class.
- critically analyze a news story to determine if it is fair, misleading, or unbalanced.
Variation: If you are working with older students, select a current event being covered in a variety of media. Have students identify three articles about the topic that have been written for different websites or publications. Which of the three articles is the most balanced? Which political or social slants do the other articles take? How do blogs and social media report the topic?

If you are working with younger students, work as a class to report on an event in your school or community. What must the reader know to gain an accurate understanding of the topic? How would your journalists change their reporting if they wanted the readers to take action (like purchase a ticket to the school play)?

Warm Up:

Fact Check!
Distribute the Power of the Press activity on the following page and read the introduction aloud as a class. Review the real historical headlines from The World and The Journal.

Working in pairs, ask students to pick one of the publications and generate a list of facts they can surmise from the content provided. Solicit some facts based on each paper and write them on the board. Now explain to the class that these articles were published before any fact checking had been done. At the time the papers were published, there was a terrible tragedy aboard the USS Maine, but it was still unclear what caused it. It could have been an attack, or a mechanical accident on the ship.

Engage your class in a discussion using these prompts:
- Why do you think The World and The Journal published sensational headlines and images?
- Why might a newspaper publish and promote a large cash reward?
- How might Americans feel after reading the headlines in The World and The Journal? What pressures might they put on politicians?
- Is it ethical to sensationalize news? What are the benefits of sensational reporting? What are the consequences?

Main Activity:

Press Pressure Today
Divide your class into groups of four or five and give each group an example of a balanced news article reporting a current event. Be sure to select articles that are age-appropriate and do not single out individuals or groups of people. (Articles exploring environmental issues, community development, and technological innovations can be used for this activity. School editions of newspapers are a great place to find content.)

Put your groups in role as reporters for an online news agency and review the directions with the class. After they’ve completed the assignment, ask each group to present its story and tactic to the class.

Reflection:

Letter to the Editor
Ask each student to select one of the historical articles or one of their classmates’ news story presentations. Working individually, each student should write a letter to the editor of their selected publication articulating why she thinks the article is good, misleading, or unbalanced reporting. As students write, walk amongst the class and ask open-ended questions to encourage reflective writing.
The Spanish-American War
In February of 1898, a battleship named the USS Maine was sunk off the coast of Cuba, killing 266 crewmen onboard. Although the cause of the explosion was still unclear, two New York newspapers claimed that the Spanish Empire sank the ship. Spain soon declared war on Washington, and, although he wanted to avoid conflict, U.S. President William McKinley quickly followed suit by declaring war on Spain. Battles were fought in the Spanish colonies of Cuba, Puerto Rico, Guam and The Philippines. Over 2,000 Americans died in the war, many from infectious diseases. A cease-fire began in August of 1898, but the war was not officially over until a treaty was signed and ratified in February of 1899. Called the Treaty of Paris, this document gave control of almost all Spanish colonies to the United States.
Introduction:
The Newsboys’ Strike of 1899 was a pivotal moment for child labor issues and, in some ways, labor relations in general. In NEWSIES, Pulitzer and Hearst are dramatized to be villainous titans, out to take advantage of helpless children. But there are two sides to every coin, and both sides of the strike needed to communicate their demands and limits to the other in order to reach an effective compromise. By exploring both sides of the issue, students will understand that strikes are the results of complex conflicts with many sides.

Subject:
Social Studies, English Language Arts, Theatre Arts

Standards Addressed:
This lesson fulfills the following Common Core State Standards:
Reading Informational Text, Grades 4-8: 1-5, 7-8
Writing, Grades 4-8: 1 (a-d), 2 (a-e), 3 (a-e), 4-9
Speaking and Listening, Grades 4-8: 1 (a-d), 2-6
Reading Standards for History/Social Studies, Grades 6-8: 1-5
Writing Standards for History/Social Studies, Grades 6-8: 1 (a-e), 2 (a-f), 4-5, 7, 9

Line of Inquiry:
Why do strikes take place? What is the goal of a strike? Why do strikes often end in compromise?

Goal:
To explore the many facets of a conflict, and to appreciate compromise as a success.

Objectives:
Students will:
- identify both sides of the Newsboys’ Strike of 1899.
- work in groups to articulate demands and limitations.
- present a persuasive argument to their peers.
- write a considered and balanced report of the Newsboys’ Strike of 1899.
Warm Up:
Two Sides To The Story
Read the article and timeline on the following pages as a class. Ask students to summarize the Newsboys’ Strike of 1899. Create two columns on the board; label one “Newsies” and the other “Publishers.” Ask students to offer items that both sides of the strike were fighting for and record them in the appropriate column. Review the outcome of the strike, and ask students who “won.” Why is this a genuine compromise?

Main Activity:
Negotiations
In order to reach a compromise, both the newsies and the publishers had to articulate their demands and limits to each other. Divide your class into two groups; assign one group to be the newsies and the other the publishers. Review the directions on the following page and put the groups to work. Ask open-ended questions to encourage collaboration. After the class has completed the assignment, have each group present their letter and proposal to their classmates.

Reflection:
Watch What Happens
Katherine Plumber, the journalist in NEWSIES, covers the strike and draws awareness to the boys’ cause. Have your students write a newspaper article summarizing the strike and its conclusion. Was the compromise a victory? If so, for whom? Were the newsboys’ lost wages and the publishers’ lost profits worth it in the end?

Variation: If you are working with older students, investigate the various union employees that students may come into contact with on a regular basis (UFT, Teamsters, Transit Union, etc.). Break your class into small groups and have each group report on the structure of a specified union, and a moment in which the union had to negotiate on behalf of its employees.
What Is A Strike?
A strike is the refusal of a large group of employees to work. This usually stops business and a means a loss of income for the business owner. Employees do not receive pay while striking, but they gain the ability to affect the operation of an industry, which gives the workers leverage in their negotiations with the business owners.

Why Do People Strike?
Strikes have occurred throughout history since people have worked (or been forced to work) for others. There is even evidence of strikes during the construction of the Great Pyramids of Egypt thousands of years ago!

Throughout the 1800s in the United States, as factories became more common, so did groups of workers banding together in protest of unfair treatment. A group of organized workers is called a union. Unions are formed to protect the interests of employees. NEWSIES dramatizes the Newsboys’ Strike of 1899. But the newsies weren’t the first kids to go on strike. In 1834, mill workers in Lowell Massachusetts began an almost century-long struggle in the textile industry when the mill girls (most were between 15 and 25 years old) went on strike against the mill owners. The mill owners were demanding the girls do more work for less pay, so the girls rallied together and went on strike.

The first large-scale American strike took place in 1877, 22 years before NEWSIES takes place. This was known as The Great Upheaval. Strikers in Martinsburg, West Virginia, angry over reduced wages for railroad workers, shut down the railroad. At that time, railroads were the lifeblood of American industry. The success of the strikers in Martinsburg caused the strike to spread to railroad workers across the country, and then to other industries where workers were either facing similar situations or simply wanted to support the railroad workers. In some places, the strike concluded because the workers gave up, while in other places, it ended because of violence. While The Great Upheaval may, at first glance, look unsuccessful, some strikers did have their demands met; more importantly, however, it showed Americans that the working class was not powerless against a wealthy minority. The strike was an effective way to protest poor working conditions.

By 1899, the year that NEWSIES takes place, more strikes were taking place in New York City than in any other city in the nation. A cartoon in The Boston Daily Globe declared New York City to be “The Greatest Strike City in America,” with 3,285 strikes between 1886 and 1899.
Work with your group to create the following items. Be sure your materials clearly communicate your desires and limitations to the other group.

- Newsies group: create picket signs and handbills stating your demands and your reasons for striking.
- Publishers group: create a newspaper ad stating your limitations and calling for an end to the strike.

A Timeline of The Newsboys’ Strike of 1899

1890 – Joseph Pulitzer’s 349-foot World Building is completed. At that time, it was the world’s tallest building.

May 23, 1895 – The New York Public Library is founded.

1898 – Brooklyn is annexed by the City of New York.

August 12, 1898 – The Spanish-American War ends.

July 20, 1899 – The strike begins. Jersey City newsboys join with the New York City newsies.

July 22, 1899 – Newsie leader Kid Blink meets Hearst outside of his office.

July 25, 1899 – Pulitzer and Hearst agree to lower the cost from 60 cents per hundred to 55 cents per hundred. The newsboys are not happy with this offer and hold out.

August 1, 1899 – Pulitzer and Hearst agree to buy back unsold papers from the newsies. The newsies, happy with this compromise, agree. The strike ends.

August 2, 1899 – The newsies of New York return to work. Life returns to normal.

January 1, 1892 – Ellis Island opens and becomes the gateway to America. It was the busiest immigration station in the nation.

February 15, 1898 – The USS Maine is sunk by a mysterious explosion in Havana Harbor, Cuba.

April 25, 1898 – The Spanish-American War begins.

July 19, 1899 – Despite declining newspaper sales after the war, Pulitzer and Hearst refuse to lower their prices from 60 cents per hundred to 50 cents per hundred. Word gets around to the newsies that the strike will start the following day.

July 24, 1899 – Pulitzer and Hearst do not give into the newsies’ demands. The publishers hire men to sell their papers, paying them as much as $2 per day to do so.

July 24, 1899 – A mass meeting of newsies is held at New Irving Hall.

July 27, 1899 – Kid Blink leaves the newsboys union. Rumors spread that he accepted a bribe from the publishers.

When you see NEWSIES, pay close attention to the deal that the newsies’ leader, Jack, negotiates with the publisher, Pulitzer. What does Jack need Pulitzer to understand? What does Pulitzer need Jack to know? Who has the most power in this scene?

Your class trip to NEWSIES should be an enriching event! Review these tips to ensure your students get the most out of their theatre-going experience.

Expectations and Etiquette
For many of your students, this class trip may be the first theatrical experience of their lives. The event itself can be overwhelming; from the bright lights of Times Square to the blackouts during the show, your students’ senses will be in overdrive. Take a few minutes before your field trip to tell your class what to expect. What is a Playbill? Are there assigned seats? How long is the show? Can the actors see the audience? What is an intermission? Young theatre-goers will have many questions about the experience.

Likewise, tell your group what is expected of them. Talking during movies is rude, but talking during a play is unacceptable; unlike movies the performers can actually hear the audience, which also means... laugh when something is funny! Clap when you are wowed! Actors appreciate an enthusiastic (but focused) audience.

When You Arrive
You’ll arrive at the theatre early so that you have plenty of time to get everyone in their seats and settled. If you have a little time before the play begins use it to your advantage! Remind your students of the explorations they’ve done leading up to this moment. What was it like when they wrote their own historically based scenes? Was the life of a newsboy fun or challenging?

Each student will receive a program from an usher—why not have a Playbill scavenger hunt? Make a game of learning about the show and its creators. Who can find the name of the show’s director? Who wrote the music in NEWSIES?

Back at School
Young people need time to unpack and process an artistic experience to solidify what they’ve learned. It’s important that you devote some time for reflection once you are back at school. Many of the activities in this guide can be used as post-theatre reflection and assessment tools, but a simple conversation can work just as well. Start by soliciting overall impressions from the group. What did they think? What did they like? How did the activities they participated in before they saw the show influence their experiences? From there, ask students what they noticed about each element of the play (script, music, staging, design, performance). Finally, devote some time to field remaining questions from your students. Is there anything they are still wondering about?
